Final Result: Create an infographic for your scene.

Infographic must include:

A title (that is/includes movie name)

3 to 6 still shots from your scene (one can be your focus, with a few smaller ones)

Organized analysis of the scene

- no particular requirement of what needs to be included*, but see note about the more detail/explanation competition

- can be full sentences or bullet points: just be sure your information is clear, descriptive, and looks good on your infographic

Review movie: in the corner/s of the infograph, review the movie with a tweet-length statement

- each of you can take a corner or you can collectively write a review; be brief/succinct

Creating your infographic:

Planning Idea: Once you have your notes, one member can begin to format the slide, one member can grab a few stills from the scene, and one member can start to type up your notes.

If you have created an infographic before/you are familiar with how to make one and know a website you can use for this – use it (there isn't time to learn and experiment with a program, so you need to know how to use it –AND be able to send me the file).

If you have not, a simple way to create one is on PowerPoint or Google Slides. You'll work on just one slide, just re-size it following the specs below – then you'll add the required info in an organized and appealing way (use back ground colors/textboxes, etc.)

PowerPoint: Open a New Blank Presentation > Design > Slide Size > Custom> → 11inch width and 17inch height
- you can switch width & height (11"x17" or 17"x 11") but you MUST keep these dimensions

Google Slides: Open New Blank Presentation > File > Page set-up > drop down to Custom> → 11inch width and 17inch height
- you can switch width & height (11"x17" or 17"x 11") but you MUST keep these dimensions

Note:

While it may be hard – especially for the later scenes, do not outwardly give away the movie (ie: be subtle, don't say "the baby" or "the birth" etc.)
